Blanche Ring, in "Broadway and Buttermilk," will appear at the Maxine Elliott Theatre to-morrow. The play was to have opened last Monday, but was postponed on account of the heat. Cyril Harcourt's comedy, "A Pair of Silk Stockings," is to have a fourth season in this country. It will be presented by a cast of English players who will arrive on August 27. The play will be presented for a brief New York engagement at one of the Shubert theatres during the present season.

Vivian Martin is the star of "The Stronger Love." She is a mountain girl who saves the life of a member of the rival clan, but decides to stick with her own set when it comes to marrying. Miss Martin is pretty and vivacious, but unfortunately she is by no means free from moving picture mannerisms. The picture is splendidly set.

A rather more interesting number on the same programme is "Nobedy Home," with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. The picture is broadly farcial, but no soups nor pies are hurled, and nobody falls downstairs. Strange as it may seem the picture is highly amusing.

There is abundant movement in "Sporting Blood" at the Academy of Music, but the picture jumps so hastily from place to place that there is often some little difficulty in following the thread of the story. Sma snatches of irrelevant action are fre quently introduced for the sake of local color. This device is employed frequently in most Fox pictures and is often affective. This time it has
